ABSTRACT

In October of each year, the Research and Statistics Section of the South Dakota Department of Public Welfare studies the racial makeup of its recipients to report on the proportion of American Indians, the state's largest minority group (32,402 or 4.9% of the state's population according to the 1970 census), receiving assistance under state welfare programs. This article presents the data obtained for October, 1972. The report consists of a number of tables showing the ratio of Indian recipients in each program and the proportion of money expended for their grants. Programs included in the survey are old age assistance, aid to the blind, aid to the disabled, aid to dependent children, and foster care. A summary of the Indian recipient rate by program for each of the last 20 years is presented, showing the trend in Indian participation in welfare assistance. Information by county and by program has been compiled for the reservation and nonreservation counties in separate groupings. (Author/FF)

SOUTH DAKOTA
INDIAN RECIPIENTS OF PUBLIC WELFARE

For October of each year, the Research and Statistics Section of the South Dakota Department of Public Welfare studies the racial makeup of its recipients to report on the proportion of Indians (the state's largest minority group) receiving assistance under state welfare programs. This pamphlet presents the data obtained for October of 1972. The report consists of a number of tables showing the ratio of Indian recipients in each program and the proportion of money expended for their grants. Programs included in the survey are: Old Age Assistance, Aid to the Blind, Aid to the Disabled, Aid to Dependent Children, and Foster Care. A summary of the Indian recipient rate by program for each of the last 20 years is presented, showing the trend in Indian participation of welfare assistance. Information by county has been compiled for the reservation and nonreservation counties in separate groupings.

According to 1970 Census data, there were 32,402 Indians living in South Dakota, which represents 4.9 percent of the state's population. While the census indicated that 7.1 percent of the state's population under 18 years of age was of Indian descent, 46.4 percent of the Department's ADC child recipients were Indian. Also, despite the fact that the census data indicated that just 2 percent of those in South Dakota over age 65 are of Indian descent, 15 percent of the Department's Old Age Assistance recipients are Indian. Those of Indian descent also make up 18 percent of the Aid to the Disabled program, and 39 percent of the adults on the Aid to Dependent Children program. This data clearly shows that a major segment of South Dakota's population in poverty is of the Indian minority.

Over 80 percent of the Indians in South Dakota reside on the reservations located within the state. These are the Cheyenne River, Lower Brule, Pine Ridge, Rosebud, Crow Creek, Yankton and Sisseton Reservations (the last two being open reservations). A part of the Standing Rock Reservation also extends into South Dakota, but it is generally considered a North Dakota reservation, since Fort Yates is its headquarters. Reservation land is not entirely owned by Indians, and much of it that is owned by them is leased to non-Indians for ranching or farming. Even though lands have been parceled out to individual families, there is often not enough land for the family to farm efficiently; thus, the lease income becomes one of the main sources of unearned income for Indian families. Other sources of income are employment in agriculture or construction work, both of which are seasonal in South Dakota's climate. The various governmental agencies, not only tribal, but federal, state and local, are the largest employers of Indians in terms of income generated. In recent years, employment opportunities for Indians have been expanding, largely due to the programs of the Office of Economic Opportunity. Indian tourism is increasing, but has not yet been developed and coordinated to the fullest extent. Obviously, the disproportionate share of the welfare assistance roles belonging to those of Indian descent is closely related to the poor employment situation the Indian currently faces.

The number of Indians in the U. S. population has increased 51 percent since 1960. This reflected an increase in South Dakota of 19.5 percent. Three major reasons were cited by the Census Bureau for the growth, which would seem to hold true for South Dakota. They were: (1) a continued high birthrate; (2) lowered infant mortality; and (3) a willingness of persons to identify themselves as Indians.

It is interesting to compare the proportionate sizes of the different age groups of the total South Dakota population with the ratio of Indians in these same age groups, the results of which are shown below:

Age Group	South Dakota Total Population		Indian Population
	Number	Percent	Number	Percent
Total	666,257	100.0	32,402	100.0
Under 18 years	241,191	36.2	17,063	52.7
18 - 64 years	344,491	51.7	13,648	42.1
65 years and over	80,575	12.1	1,691	5.2

These comparisons reflect the higher birthrate and lower life expectancy of Indians, as well as the smaller proportion of persons in the earning years who must support the children and elderly.
